INNERLINK CEO QUOTED IN FORBES

Lancaster, PA – On the twelfth anniversary of September 11th, 2001, Dr. Robert G. Gillio, InnerLink’s CEO, was quoted in a Forbes article titled, “Lasting Effects: Health Impact on First Responders.” From the article:

“Those lessons in 2001 changed my career from one that treated preventable disease to one that finds ways to discover who is at risk and to intervene to prevent a chronic disease or acute injury and to empower the individual to be the health hero for themselves and their community.”

The article goes on to cite Dr. Gillio as “significantly responsible” for the creation of the World Trade Center Health Registry. “This Registry, which allows health professionals to track and investigate illnesses and recovery related to September 11th also helps create guidelines that can save lives and reduce injuries in future disasters.”

To learn more on how Dr. Gillio continues to use his skills and passions to improve communities through his focus school professionals, go to www.theinnerlink.com.
